Medieval rhetoric:: A select bibliography (Toronto medieval bibliographies) James Jerome Murphy

Designed to encourage the study of the medieval art of discourse, this bibliography has served for fifteen years as an invaluable guide to modern works on the theory of communication in Europe from the time of Saint Augustine to the Renaissance. Now a new edition brings the material up to date and presents it in a completely reorganized format.

The history of medieval rhetoric can be understood only as part of medieval efforts to understand the manifold uses of language. To this end, Murphy includes works which show the relation of grammar to rhetoric and the impact of logic upon both. Cross references are provided where appropriate and key works are annotated.
