A one hundred twenty-five year old mansion, family secrets, family friends that may not be friends... Madeline Dean feels her life is hopeless. Madeline loves old--everything.... buildings, homes, furniture. She runs Pacific Northwest Designs in Eugene, Oregon, a business in which she restores old homes. But the business is struggling. Her estranged and highly volatile husband wants to come back and try the marriage again. She thinks these problems are insurmountable. That is until her mother is brutally murdered in the family's historic nineteenth century mansion outside Los Gatos, CA. There appears to be no reason to explain the murder of Madeline's sixty-year-old mother, Eleanor Abbott. A wealthy, community minded and philanthropic business woman, she was loved by many. This loss, on the heels of the death of her father Clay Abbott only eighteen months prior, has put Madeline in a tailspin. Suddenly she's back in her old world, but unhappily, for it's a world where nothing is as it was. Then threats begin against Madeline's own life and Los Gatos PD Detectives Scott Cooper and partner Isabelle Morales strive to try to make sense out of a case that makes no sense. Is it possible that Clay Abbott's accidental death was actually murder? As feelings of guilt about her mother's death consume her, Madeline struggles to deal with sorrow as well as the fear that she may be the next target. When the violence escalates, long held family secrets, simmering hatred and conspiracy combine to create a situation that threatens Madeline's life and her legacy.
