Meet the Warhawks: a team of cyborg superheroes sworn to protect the world using non-lethal force. It's a code that will be tested in their first contact with the ultimate enemy, the villainous cyborg syndicate Maelstrom.

In the epic first issue of this debut series, Jefferson Caesar AKA Weapon, the Warhawks' soulful leader, welcomes Timothy Pendragon AKA Arsenal, to their ranks. Son of the Warhawks' genius creator Dr. Pendragon, Timothy has abandoned his disease-ravaged body in favor of a dangerous transplant into a giant Mobile Assault Unit. It's a transformation that causes haunting side-effects in his consciousness that he struggles to keep under wraps.

The battle begins as Maelstrom attacks a next-generation space shuttle in search of the first critical component for their suitably sinister plan called Project Zeus. Our heroes quickly discover that Headhunter, a former ally, is leading the Maelstrom field missions with technology that can defeat the Warhawks.

Can the Warhawks code against lethal force survive in the face of superior weaponry, betrayal, and true evil?

ABOUT THE CREATOR

Science fiction writer Jason Coffee studied television and film at Northwestern University, where he received the T. Stephen May award for outstanding achievement in screenwriting.

As Jason pursued his dream of becoming a film and television writer, he worked as a writer's assistant and script analyst in Los Angeles. He was on the staff of one of his favorite shows, Babylon 5, and read scripts for one of his favorite directors, James Cameron. As a writer's assistant on Roswell, he even got to rub elbows with the First Officer of the Enterprise when Jonathan Frakes directed several episodes.

Health problems interrupted Jason's dream, and he died on December 30th, 2008 at the age of 33.

Jason's friends have rallied around his memory to adapt his screenplay Warhawks into this ongoing comic book series.
