Gabriel is solitary by design, not by choosing. He has a few friends—okay, one real friend and his roping partner. But being the town pastor's son isn't easy. Not to mention he's sure he was born askew, without the ability to experience life the way others seem to. It is the only explanation he has for why he isn't like everyone else. But when he rescues Zane, a misplaced city boy dressed in tattoos and leather, from a killer bumblebee, he experiences more than he expects. Zane shows Gabriel that sometimes the path you've chosen isn't set in stone, and more times than not, you'll find yourself in the last place you look.
